

ECNAIS SEMINAR
Bucharest, Rumania

Parliament Building, Bucharest, Romania

Thursday 14 November and Friday 15 November 2013

The role that civil societies play in developing independent education at all levels

The objectives of the seminar are to discuss the role of independent schools in Romania and to explore the relationship between independent schools and civil societies. The seminar will also discuss the role of independent schools in the development of independent education at all levels and the role of civil societies in this process. The seminar will also discuss the role of independent schools in the development of independent education at all levels and the role of civil societies in this process.

In each European country the Romanian legislation on independent education can not be fully understood without taking into consideration the cultural and political history of the country.

In the seminar we will focus on:

- the Romanian legislation on independent education and the wish to reform the initiatives from the civil society
- the members will reflect on the subject by making a comparison with their own countries legislation on independent education and the efforts to enhance and strengthen the position of independent education
- an analysis of differences in legislation on independent education at a European level
- partially independent education as a main topic in Romanian independent education
- the meaning and effect of minimum quality standards for the improvement of the quality of education
